Hamishi Farah

Dog Heaven 2 : How Sweet the Wound of Jesus Tastes

The exhibition

Dog Heaven 2 : How Sweet the Wound of Jesus Tastes is Hamishi Farah's first institutional exhibition and a sequel to the artist's first solo show in Europe in 2015 in Brussels. The exhibition gathers newly commissioned paintings and other recent works.

Hamishi Farah is a self-taught artist whose work in conceptual and figurative painting plays inside the production of a politics and philosophy of representation, with a particular focus on the libidinal afterlife of coloniality and its permeation through contemporary art.

While representational painting is shackled to narrative, representation itself flirts with an atemporal immanence upon arrival at a Blackness understood outwardly as a concept that negatively structures human capacity. The philosopher Fred Moten argues that the negative structuring of human capacity is not to invoke the inhuman but something closer to the ante-human, what necessarily came before, in perpetuity before, suggesting this world-shaping Blackness as another name for the force that is not endemic to, but currently occupied by the people who refer to ourselves as Black. To stretch an Afropessimist logic atemporally, you could assume Jesus Christ was Black because it was necessary for Christians to reenact his murder in perpetuity to feel human.

The exhibition is organized by Mohamed Almusibli, independent curator based in Geneva, Switzerland.

The title

Dog Heaven (2015) is a sculpture made of a table, a fountain, a pump. The fountain has a dog's head affixed to one side, its tail on the opposite side. The work made on the occasion of the artists' first exhibition in Europe in 2015 returns and gives its title to the exhibition. It is a tribute to the first dog to survive a shipwreck and become the first canine migrant. The sculpture is accompanied by a retroactive application for the importation of pets installed in a molding on the wall.

The content

The works in the exhibition are productions from 2015 to 2021 and each reflects the artist's field of research into issues and methods of representation. The selection of recent works such as Helen (2017) and Black Lena Dunham (2020) touch on the possibilities of non-human representation, inspired by Afro-pessimistic theory. Representation of Arlo (2019), meanwhile, demonstrates the uneven politics of representation.

Through the image of a ghost, a huge spider, or various biblical representations such as Christ or Saint Thomas, each new work commissioned for the exhibition engages philosopher Fred Moten's theory of the ante-human.

The exhibition is completed by a selection of original drawings by the artist taken from his comic book Airport Love Theme (Book Works, 2020).

Fri Art Kunsthalle

Since its opening in 1991, over 160 exhibitions 30 outdoor projects were organised by Fri Art Kunsthalle, along with a rich program of talks, conferences, concerts and performances.

Fri Art is situated at Petites-Rames 22, an industrial building in the old town of Fribourg, Switzerland. Located at the crossroad of different linguistic regions, the art center is an important venue for the Swiss contemporary art scene.

Fri Art has gained international reputation for the adventurousness and global scope of a curatorial program that mixes young artists, historical surveys and important group exhibitions. In recent years, Fri Art presented several personal exhibitions by young or established artists, both swiss and international, such as Calla Henkel & Max Pitegoff (2020), Ketty La Rocca (2020), Gene Beery (2019), Hanne Lippard (2018), Lucie Stahl (2018), Peter Schuyff (2017), Cameron Rowland (2016) or Hannah Weinberger (2014).

Window Seat, an installation by Alfatih and Soraya Lutangu Bonaventure

Window Seat is an audio-visual installation evoking the notions of travel, whether those are physical, cognitive or spiritual. Taking inspiration from spaces of interfaith exchanges and the exploration of liminal situations, Window Seat offers to the visitor a contemplative journey between the sacred and the secular.
